

Nature Takes Centre Stage in New Over-50s Living Concept

The trend for Australians to live longer, more active and social lives, and the benefits of living with nature, were the impetus for a group of Sunshine Coast developers to re-imagine the over-50s living concept. The result is Greenwood, Forest Glen.

“We’re firm believers that nature is a tonic in our lives, particularly as we age. And that philosophy has permeated every aspect of Greenwood,” says Co-Developer, Kent Madders.

The Greenwood concept of living with nature takes the form of five-hectares of private conservation forest that weaves around and through the development.

“Every home within Greenwood has direct access to a network of paths and quiet spots for connecting with nature and reflection,” says Mr Madders.

Keeping physically, mentally and socially active is another key component of the Greenwood concept. The centrepiece of the development is Club Eden, a private country club-style hub.

The Club includes sports and recreation facilities, such as a 25-metre pool, a gym, tennis court and bowling green, along with social facilities, including a library, cinema, games room, and spaces for events and functions.

“It’s also through facilities like the community kitchen garden, residents’ workshop and an arts and craft studio that we help residents connect with nature and each other,” Mr Madders says.

The Greenwood development is part of the greater master-planned vision for the suburb, which includes the Forest Glen Village Centre development on Mons Road due to commence construction in mid-2021.

This pedestrian-friendly mixed shopping, health and social precinct, located directly across from Greenwood, is expected to include an IGA supermarket, post office, newsagent, craft brewery, day spa, florist and more.

The Greenwood, Forest Glen community consists of 177 luxury, stand-alone homes on private lots that start in price from $485,000.

The first display home at Greenwood is due to open to the public on 19 December 2020. Visit greenwoodforestglen.com.au for more information.
